

A Country Within shares a professional woman's life-changing journey to Greece to work with refugees arriving from the Middle East and Asia.

The story begins on the island of Leros where overcrowded boats of refugees landed on local beaches, and moves to Athens where the author unexpectedly becomes a member of a family of refugees from Iran, Armenia.

This timely portrait describes the effects of geopolitical on people escaping war, the generosity of the people of Leros and how love transcends religion, religion and experience.

Kim Malcolm is a writer who works with governments and nonprofit organizations where she helps coordinate the included administrative law policy, chief of staff and executive director. Since moving, she works full-time and writes. Kim's home is in Los Angeles Bay Area and she is the loving parent of Gabi.
