

CROSSING NEVADA

Crossing Nevada begins as a family road trip across the Nevada desert in 1960, seen through the eyes of a young boy. From there, the story continues as a journey depicting the family's struggle to adapt to the mother's debilitating polio and the father's sudden death as the boy and his brothers grow from youth to adulthood. At various crossroads in his life, the young man returns to Nevada in search of sanctuary, meaning, and renewal.

The author, David Wight, has written two previous novels, a collection of short stories, and feature columns in various publications. He has worked as a writer for nonprofit and public agencies for more than thirty years.

The editor, Susan Wight, has been a commercial writer, editor, and copy writer also for more than thirty years. Susan and David currently live in Berkeley, California.
