

HOMELAND

ROBERT KEPPTA

507.97

Several subsequent events marked him during his ordeal and afterward.

As he was still a citizen of the (new) Czech Republic, he was subsequently removed into military service. The world eventually decided, make his way back to America as a POW, but he determined right without papers or Ellis Island. When decided, he was to be sent back to Europe to be liberated a deserter. Many early first military interventions could save him.

He was not yet a US citizen when he left to start his journey. Because of this, he was deemed as a legal citizen of the Czech Republic (what was then the Austro-Hungarian Empire when he first left). However, a narrowly ended awarded him.

Frank immigrated to America at age seven. Now twenty-eight years old, he wants to visit his homeland to see his childhood friends.

-Bradley Stevenson

"Very engaging, could not put it down until I read the entire thing! Highly recommend this book."

- Bill Vancik

"Absolutely captivating! I could not put it down. When I was finished, I read it again. Fascinating main character whose resourcefulness and faith are both equally awe inspiring."