

A man was walking at the edge of town, when he came to a giant tree(He had no idea what species it was...he wasn't an arborist). He noticed a large protruding branch that looked like a hangman's bough, and he got a sudden urge to climb the tree and hang upside down by his legs(Apparently re-visiting his youth). So he's hanging there for a while, loses track of time, and his legs fall asleep. He wants to come down from the tree, but his legs are failing him. Desperate, he starts to swing but cannot get the momentum, so he tries instead to reach up and push one of his legs over the branch. The man falls out of the tree and onto his head, breaking his neck. He's dead. The impact dislodged some coins from his pockets, and they lay as motionless as he on the ground around him...