

Then towards the end of the summer, it seemed that the sky had dried up. That hot sun, how it beamed down upon our brown grass and our house and our car, and the frog's little pool looked more like brown-black tar.

