

"What are you looking for? We're not going to serve this big guy tea, are we?" Jane hissed!

"A diversion," she said holding up a bottle and a box of chocolates.

"Major, did they teach you that in the army, bribery with chocolates? He's wearing a huge gun on his ample waistline!"

"No, we're making a bomb. Here help me unwrap these chocolates, Mmm. They're good, save the foil wrapping and fold them down like this." Jane watched, biting into a piece. "Yummy, I hope this isn't our last supper, she said folding foils quickly, now what?"

"Okay, I think we have enough. We are going to place the foils into this half-filled bottle of Ammonia and leave it by the stove, and turn on the burners."

Jane finished the explanation. "The foil will create a chemical reaction with the acidity and expand the bottle causing it to explode, brilliant! How much time do you think we have. We need to sneak out the way we came in?"

"Unknown, so let's make it a fast sneak, ready!" Sue Lee stuffed the folio into the bottle and sealed it as Jane turned on the gas burner.

One more look out the window; Jane grabbed the briefcase and said, "Let's get the hell out of here!"

They sprinted out the back door running behind the other buildings!

The oversized caretaker turned to see what the commotion was all about while he was holding Jesus under the water. The kitchen exploded, and parts of the wall hit him like shrapnel! What was left inside the building burst into flames just as Sue Lee and Jane ran over to help Jesus.

"My God, we destroyed the place! Jane said, holding his head out of the water as Sue Lee untied the ropes. Can you stand," Jane asked as they helped Jesus to his feet?

"Sí, he said coughing, is the big one dead?"

"I'm sure he is. Sue Lee answered as they walked by looking at the piece of wood that had pierced his body. We better hurry, this fire can be seen for miles."