THIS
BOOK
BELONGS
TO

TO BE A HERO

Bomani
Weatherbee-Kelley

What's a Superhero?
What I gotta do to be one?
Do I need a cape and mask?
Powers so I can become
The reason they wanna be one?
That might be fun no doubt
Stand on one of those tall buildings
And be a neighborhood lookout
Help the people without Part the clouds that shroud their Day-to-Day
Watch the kids play
While my hands spark fireworks
Sure to amaze even the dullest
Adult

Some grown folks have forgotten
Their Superheroes
Their comics collect dust
While their main villain, Taxes, collects What it must
But I could provide light rays to them again
Get them to feel like playing again

These Superhero legacies
For you and me alike
Are like otherworldly histories
We can only dream of
With futures so bright
They literally outshine the sun
Just think about it
A world with endless possibilities
With so many characters
All making up one epic saga

Except
Our world has Heroes already
They just aren't called Superheroes
They are those who fight across vast distances to protect their homes
They are those that can heal even the morbidly ill
They are those who grant us the ability to fly out to what once seemed like the far reaches of our own planet
They Provide
Protect Prevail
Prove themselves worthy of being called Heroes
The crazy thing is you and I might just be those Heroes one day.
Huh...
I might not need that cape and mask
After all.

WHAAM!

Magma

Dr. Octavia Wise is a physical volcanologist who possesses a doctorate in geology. When not penning her next book on volcanoes, Magma uses her elemental abilities to stop the destructive flow of lava.

Absorption, redirection, and transformation, Magma controls lava with the same focused skill that earned her the Defender of Justice Superhero Award.
