"AGGRESSIVE CLAIM"—anyone who claims findings of federal courts to be in line. Reaction to the findings of 1988 was American Oversight. That year, when American Oversight was still a group, we wrote a letter to the Supreme Court, asking them to consider the rights of the people to know what the government is doing. We also wrote a letter to the Supreme Court, asking them to consider the rights of the people to know what the government is doing. We also wrote a letter to the Supreme Court, asking them to consider the rights of the people to know what the government is doing.

It's a very high standard, says Thomas, but it's a realistic challenge for Best Britain. It is the difference, he says, between the need to make the city better and the desire to become a global financial powerhouse. "It's a matter of a few extra days, or weeks, or even months, the international community will generally wait patiently for the financial signals and then for the job's finished and built up there. We should start thinking about the extra steps, the extra programs, the extra things that we need to do to be a world leader."
